

While You Dance with Her Tonight

By Tristan Colpitts

While you dance with her tonight,
Hold her in your arms real tight.
Though you want to do what's right,
You can't promise it will always be alright.

You cannot promise to always be around,
And even when you are, you may shut down.
But promise to give it a try.
You don't have to say everything, just don't lie.

She wants to understand and be there for you.
Try to open up and share your view.
Though this is hard and will not be fun,
I beg you to know it needs to get done.

The doors you have built are ugly and sad.
They work to disrupt and make all mad.
Open your heart and break down those doors.
Do this I pray, for her sake and yours.

You cannot promise a certain future,
But you can promise to always be with her.
Though sometimes you're not physically there,
You are connected through the love you share.

Help her with the heartache she will bear.
Be the man I know, and show her you still care.
Whisper to her your trouble and confusion.
Show her you are vulnerable and working towards a resolution.

Yes, there will be valleys and tough times,
And you may want to give up sometimes.
But sturdy yourself and when you persevere,
Know that good times are always near.

Enjoy the joyful moments you have together.
They're beautiful times and truly a treasure.
Through all this time your love stays strong.
Together you can face any trial that comes along.

Keep your head up, and as you dance tonight,
Hold her in your arms real tight.

For right now everything is just right.