

Chicago winters turn brown dust to crystal

by Katelyn Dunne

The park fills with snow cluttered with dog and squirrel prints. Cars whiz by and see the marred grass but don't pay attention. The dust that once blew, tumbleweeds across the greenest grass, gasps in our lungs, changes into ice, the only rinks Chicago kids will ever know.